STUDENT AWARENESS ABOUT P.G. PROGRAMMES

- post graduate programs are increasingly perceived as time consuming and not worth the money. This perception is in total contrast to the ground reality. Employers are more inclined to look for post graduate qualifications in a potential employee, especially in the field of business and management. On the other hand, to discontinue education after graduation, there must be clarity of thought and it should connect with the aspirations of the student. Undoubtedly, the allure of financial independence is the major driver in our country that leads to a proliferation of graduates and sometimes a paucity of high caliber post graduates.
- Earlier there were very few (mainly government) institutions offering Post Graduate Programs that led to a rush for admissions. Now, as the education sector has opened up to cater to the emergent needs of a large populace, one has many alternatives and options. The demand for management post graduate programmes has led to several quality institutes offering PGDM programs and PGPM programs in management. Besides there are institutes offering a one year MBA to cater to the experienced or working professionals. A postgraduate course, especially an MBA, will strengthen the CV and help one stand out amongst the crowds. Knowledge & the right skills, at a higher level would help one to take advantage of the most apt prospects in their field of work. With a postgraduate qualification on the CV, securing a good job is more likely, and the possibility of a higher salary is greater.

- Career progression in existing roles, if one is / was already working would certainly benefit from a postgraduate course. One will gain additional skills and knowledge which will propel one in their existing role or industry. Besides it would also be an indication to the employer of the seriousness of the candidate for career success. For some, taking sometime off from work to gain a postgraduate degree is possible in view of the advent of one year MBA courses. Also there are part time postgraduate courses for those who want to study without giving up work through online courses.

Conclusion-

The benefits of pursuing post-graduation courses are substantial and need a serious look. It has the potential to transform the professional and personal outlook of a person and take their career on an upward path. Pursuing a Master's course will open up new avenues and can create opportunities for one's career. India offers some of the best and varied options for post graduate courses with institutes offering post graduate diplomas, one year MBA courses, two year PGDM programs and more. Post graduate study in India is evolving and can cater to a wide audience. Some of the best PGDM colleges in the world, are in India. Besides one-year MBA programs in India are also gaining in popularity. Education being a priority sector, easy financing by banks is available and this has brought postgraduate study within everyone's reach.
